Villa Le Barone, an historic mansion in the Chianti countryside, is surrounded by woods, vineyards, and olive groves... and produces its own extra virgin biological olive oil.

More than 700 olive trees on the property are producing the extra virgin biological olive oil that we use in our restaurant, but that we also sell. Our guests are extremely happy, when they leave us, to take a few liters in their suitcases, or to have it sent home.

We also produce olive oil in our biological farm in Alta Maremma, where we also raise free range cattle. The olive tree is an essential part of the Tuscan landscape and olive oil is the traditional symbol of the Mediterranean diet and has been listed as an intangible heritage by UNESCO.

Food, landscape, civil, cultural and religious life are indissolubly linked to olive oil, through centuries of history, and still today olive oil continues to be a cultural landmark.

Let us recall that the olive tree is synonymous with peace and victory. In the Old Testament, the olive branch that the dove brought back to Noah's door means the return of peace after the Flood.

But let us also recall that olive oil is known for its many health benefits as it contains essential vitamins, nutrients, and antioxidants

We are currently harvesting the olives to prepare the delicious and healthy extra virgin olive oil eco-labelled that we serve at Villa Le Barone.

And as we are approaching Christmas, this could be a good idea for an unusual and surprising gift.
